WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

Hey Mother Nature: Enough with the snow already! The constant barrage of winter weather has made it nearly impossible to get excited for spring, which officially starts today. Although another impending snowstorm is putting a damper on the beginning of the season, hopefully we can enjoy the warmth and sunny days soon. Since Boston is such a great city to explore during the spring, we rounded up a few of the season's marquee events and destinations that you have to check out this year.

TRUMP ADDS DC LAWYER DIGENOVA TO LEGAL TEAM

President Donald Trump is beefing up his legal team with a lawyer who accuses the FBI and Justice Department of trying to frame Trump with false charges of colluding with Russia during the 2016 election campaign, possibly signaling a more aggressive drive to discredit special counsel Robert Mueller. Washington lawyer Joseph diGenova will join the legal team later this week, according to attorney Jay Sekulow, who also represents Trump. DiGenova, a former U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, did not respond to requests for comment. According to diGenova, when Hillary Clinton lost the 2016 election to Trump, the senior officials, including former FBI Director James Comey, sought to ruin Trump with an investigation into possible collusion between his 2016 campaign and Russia.

LAWMAKERS PROBE DATA PRACTICES OF FACEBOOK

Facebook Inc. Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg faced calls on Monday from U.S. and European lawmakers to explain how a consultancy that worked on President Donald Trump's election campaign gained improper access to data on 50 million Facebook users. Facebook's shares closed down nearly 7 percent, wiping nearly $40 billion off its market value, as investors worried that new legislation could damage the company's advertising business. "The lid is being opened on the black box of Facebook's data practices, and the picture is not pretty," said Frank Pasquale, a University of Maryland law professor. Facebook said on Monday it had hired a digital forensics firm Stroz Friedberg to carry out a comprehensive audit.

As US opioid crisis grows, Trump calls for death penalty for dealers

The Justice Department will also target negligent physicians and pharmacies, Trump said.

President Donald Trump spelled out in new detail several steps he favors to fight a U.S. epidemic of opioid abuse, including the execution of drug dealers, a proposal that has gained little support from drug abuse and judicial experts.

At an event in Manchester, New Hampshire, Trump unveiled an anti-opioid abuse plan, including his death penalty recommendation, new funding for other initiatives and stiffer sentencing laws for drug dealers.

He said the United States must "get tough" on opioids. "And that toughness includes the death penalty," he said. Neither Trump nor the White House gave further details as to when it would be appropriate to seek the death penalty.

Trump said that he was working with Congress to find $6 billion in new funding for 2018 and 2019 to fight the opioid crisis. The plan will also seek to cut opioid prescriptions by a third over three years by changing federal programs, he said.

Addiction to opioids — mainly prescription painkillers, heroin and fentanyl — is a growing U.S. problem, especially in rural areas. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 42,000 people died from opioid overdoses in 2016.

For Trump, the New Hampshire visit returned him to a state that gave him a key Republican primary election win when he was a political newcomer in 2016. Back then, he promised to tackle the opioid crisis, which is severe in the New England state.

In October, he declared the crisis a public health emergency, but without providing more money. Some critics, including Democratic lawmakers, said then that the declaration was meaningless without additional funds.

In Manchester, Trump stopped at a local fire station that helps addicts get treatment. He was greeted by roughly 200 protesters, some chanting "You talk, we die."

Others carried signs, including one that read "Donald J. Duterte," a reference to the Philippine leader Rodrigo Duterte, whose brutal crackdown on drugs has led to thousands of deaths.

Trump said he wanted to give first responders access to life-saving drugs that can reverse overdoses. He said the nasal spray Narcan, which can block opioid effects in overdoses, would be provided free to U.S. schools.

He introduced Mike Kelly, an executive at Adapt Pharma, which makes Narcan, at the event. "We've provided, free-of-charge, four boxes to all colleges and universities in the United States. Two boxes free for every high school in the United States, as well as educational awareness," Kelly said.

Shares in Narcan seller Opiant Pharmaceuticals, Adapt's commercial partner, rose sharply after Trump's comments.

Trump also said his plan would crack down on international and domestic illicit drug supply chains. Part of that would include requiring electronic data for 90 percent of international mail shipments with goods, he said.

He said the United States would "engage with China and expand cooperation with Mexico to reduce supplies of heroin, other illicit opioids, and precursor chemicals."

The Justice Department will target negligent physicians and pharmacies, he said, adding that he was considering litigation against drug companies implicated in the opioid crisis.

"We will continue to aggressively prosecute drug traffickers and we will use federal law to seek the death penalty wherever appropriate," Attorney General Jeff Sessions said in a statement. The death penalty is allowed in 31 states.

Ohio Democratic Rep. Tim Ryan, in a statement, said Trump took too long to offer a plan, but praised him for offering "ambitious, evidence-based reforms."

He added, "I am disappointed that President Trump felt the need to ... encourage prosecutors to seek the death penalty against drug dealers. I am all for punishing drug dealers, but I'm not for pushing the death penalty." REUTERS

Mayor Walsh announces next One Boston Day as 2018 marathon banners unveiled

Mayor Marty Walsh announced the next One Boston Day, an annual day of kindness, while on Boylston Street on Monday.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Start thinking of some acts of kindness, Boston. Mayor Marty Walsh has officially announced the next One Boston Day for April 15.

On April 15, 2013, the Boston Marathon bombings scarred the city. But now, Boston residents have responded to the anniversary of the tragedy with a day of kindness and generosity.

Now known as One Boston Day, April 15 is a day for random acts of kindness and the spreading of goodwill. The first event occurred in 2015 and Walsh permanently declared April 15 as One Boston Day in 2016.

This year marks the fourth One Boston Day and five years since the bombings.

Walsh officially announced this year's event on Monday while at the unveiling of the 2018 Boston Marathon street banners on Boylston Street, four weeks away from the marathon.

"One Boston Day has turned the Marathon into a movement our entire city has rallied around, spreading the message of kindness and goodwill across the world," the mayor said in a statement. "April 15 will forever be a day that represents the resilience of the human spirit, and I hope everyone can mark this day in a way that showcases the very best of our city and its people."

Individuals and organizations can share their One Boston Day plans by visiting the onebostonday.org site, and on social media with the hashtag #OneBostonDay.

Massachusetts Uber driver charged with raping female passenger

A Massachusetts man charged with raping a woman who was reportedly his Uber passenger was arraigned in Roxbury Municipal Court on Monday.

Ranjan Thapa, 26, of Everett, was arrested Sunday after he was stopped by Northeastern University Police who were responding to a call of sexual assault. Police stopped him around 1 a.m. near the area of Hemenway Street in the South End.

Thapa told police that he was a rideshare operator driving a female passenger home. Observing the woman, officers on the scene thought she seemed distressed and may have been sexually assaulted, the Boston Police Department said.

The woman was then transported to a hospital for treatment. An investigation by the Boston Police Sexual Assault Unit provided probable cause for police to arrest Thapa and charge him with rape.

"I know I'm in trouble — I had sex with her."

Ranjan Thapa

Per the police report, obtained by CBS Boston, Thapa told an officer, "I know I'm in trouble — I had sex with her."

The police also interviewed the woman on Sunday afternoon, according to CBS Boston, who in the police report told officials that she had been drinking all day and did not remember what happened, and also was not the person who ordered the Uber.

Thapa pleaded not guilty at his arraignment on Monday. His bail was set at $10,000 and he was ordered to surrender his passport and to stay away from the victim in the event that he posts bail.

Judge Kenneth Fiandaca also granted on Monday a protective order to keep the victim's personal information confidential.

In a statement, Uber said that, "What police describe is deeply troubling."

"The driver has been removed from the app, and we stand ready to assist the Boston Police Department with their investigation," the company said in an emailed statement.

Thapa's next court date is scheduled for April 17. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Another nor'easter — the fourth this month — is expected to hit Massachusetts this week. DEREK HOUYOUNIAN/METRO

Boston could get more snow this week, as spring begins

The calendar may say spring, but the National Weather Service says yet another storm is on the way for Massachusetts.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

It may technically be spring today, but the weather doesn't seem to care what the calendar says: Yet another nor'easter is expected to bring snow to New England later this week.

The National Weather Service's Boston office said Sunday that it's "confident" the area will see some impact from this storm. Since it's still a few days out, though, the "breadth and magnitude" of the nor'easter is still uncertain.

"Right now it appears that there's going to be a little bit of light snow across portions of eastern Massachusetts," said National Weather Service meteorologist Matthew Belk.

"The heaviest looks like it's across south-east Massachusetts right now," he added, "but depending on the track of the storm, those amounts could go up or down."

The storm is expected to hit between Wednesday and Thursday. Right now, forecasters predict Boston will get about 3 inches of snow by Thursday morning, with areas to the south like Plymouth expecting 5 inches.

Though Tuesday officially marks the start of spring on the calendar, temperatures around Boston are still stuck in winter. Tuesday could hit a high near 39 degrees and dip to a low of 27 at night.

Last Friday, the National Weather Service tweeted that the low temps in New England are the average for early February, adding, "...it's March 16th."

Ahead of this week's storm, temperatures will still feel stuck in the winter with "dry but unseasonably cold weather," the weather service said.

"The normal high temperature in Boston [for this time] is 46 degrees and the normal low is 32, Belk said. "So to kind of put that in perspective, yes it's not near normal, it's below normal — but we're not setting any records."

This nor'easter will be the fourth for Massachusetts just this month. The state is still recovering from previous storms that battered the eastern part of the state, causing floods and power outages due to heavy, wet snow and strong winds.

Since March 2, American Red Cross of Massachusetts disaster responders have served more than 13,000 meals and snacks, distributed more than 3,500 relief items like hygiene products and clean-up kits and provided 600 overnight stays in shelters.

For this upcoming storm, Belk said National Weather Service meteorologists will continue to monitor its progress, and he advised Massachusetts residents do the same.

Don't over-do it with your grad school course load

It's a completely different grade than undergrad. ISTOCK

It may be tempting to take as many courses as possible, but you'll burn you out faster than you'd imagine.

patrick.king@metro.us

Getting accepted into a graduate-school program can feel like a huge step in the right direction. You've narrowed down the type of work you want to do and are attending a program that'll help get you there. But remember, grad school's not the same as your undergraduate program. You need to make the most of it and be conscious of your course load to avoid overextending yourself.

"For the most part, for undergraduates, it's study first and everything else later," says John Rodzvilla, the graduate-program director of Emerson College's Writing and Publishing program. "In graduate school, that sort of flips. Many graduate students are working part-time or full-time. They're adults and they have so many things going on besides school."

After four years of treating your undergraduate program like an academic utopia, reality's about to set in ...

"A four-hour class comes with six to eight hours of additional work and reading."

John Rodzvilla, graduate program director of Emerson College's Writing and Publishing program

majorly. On top of class, study and coursework, you'll have things like rent and your future looming much larger than they were at 22.

This is why Rodzvilla believes students should not overdo it — especially at first. "At Emerson when we talk to our graduates coming in we limit them to two classes for their first semester," he says. "They can take up to three, but we try to limit them to one or two until they get familiar with the program, or adjust to what graduate school is like. It's not the same as undergrad. We have a four-hour class, and they should expect an additional six to eight hours outside of class to do readings, homework and other work."

FIRST-YEAR GRAD SCHOOL TIPS

- Start small, and focussed
Cherry-pick courses based on content and faculty
- Study in advance
Get started on reading lists as soon as they're available
- Link in
This is your chance to network and set up your first few years in the field

- Prepare to be poor
There aren't going to be enough (paid) hours in a day to make a solid living
- Seek advice
Lean on the mentors available to you. They might not be there in the real world
- Nota bene
You'll never read so much in your life, but the key is retention

After spending nearly 20 years of your life in a classroom, you should view graduate school as a learning environment in which you're weaned away from that bubble.

You're almost free! "Almost" being the key word. Now you need to focus on the brief, albeit demanding, workload ahead of you before you earn that next degree.

What to keep in mind when starting grad school

Have an end goal in mind

The working world might seem faraway, but universities want to know what your plans are after graduation. If you can show how your program will further your career ambitions, your career-services department and advisers can help keep you on track.

Keep attending university fairs and career events

Just because you've started a program doesn't mean other connections won't prove valuable when you make it to the real world. Proudly represent your school at events aimed at recruitment, but also collect business cards with as much diligence as you did when you were shopping around a year ago.

Chase the (free) money

Your scholarship planning may be out of the way, but that doesn't mean channels to additional funds are closed once you begin studying. Constantly look for grants, tax breaks and fellowships both online and on campus.

Form your own study group

It's easier than ever to work out who you'll be studying with ahead of time, and to evaluate who's learning style will complement your own. Don't wait for group projects to be assigned before you reach out to people in the same boat as you — group learning can be a key facet to retention and understanding.

Creativity is Hallmark of Stonehill's Integrated Marketing Communication Master's Program

Your favorite brands aren't your favorites just because of their awesome products. They're also favorites because a team of graphic designers, copywriters and marketing strategists collaborated to present their products' strengths in a way that resonates with your values and aspirations.

The minds and strategies behind these campaigns are a perfect example of integrated marketing communications (IMC) in practice — marketers, advertisers, public relations specialists, copywriters and graphic designers all working together to create a clear and (hopefully) convincing message and determining how to make sure you see it.

"IMC creates an environment where communication messages are clear, consistent and carefully linked together to be more meaningful and impactful," said Lee McGinnis, director of Stonehill College's IMC master's degree program.

INTERDISCIPLINARY APPROACH ENCOURAGES CREATIVITY

When Stonehill College launched its IMC master's in January, it saw the opportunity to fill a void in the typical array of business-centric IMC programs. Stonehill designed its program to emphasize creativity and broadened its scope to include communication, marketing and graphic design, which helps students look at the marketing field through a variety of lenses. Students learn about all three fields and how those disciplines interact and strengthen each other.

"Stonehill really has a handle on the interdisciplinary focus, a real attribute to the program," said Melissa Ratliff, director of graduate admission at Stonehill College. She says the program is different from an MBA program because it studies issues from many different perspectives, allowing you to draw out your creativity more in your career.

"The IMC program is focused on being innovative," said McGinnis. "It combines the best of the latest creative methods with digital marketing, e-commerce and other high-tech marketing and communications courses to help students elevate their career prospects."

As a student at Stonehill, you will work alongside other working professionals who are also looking to advance their careers.

"I was attracted to Stonehill's IMC program because of the interdisciplinary approach that it takes," said Geoff Lennon, a technology project manager at W.B. Mason. "Specializing in technology projects, I know that the greatest successes come when a company is able to leverage the diverse skills of its team members — so I'm looking forward to learning from faculty (and classmates) who have diverse skills and knowledge across the marketing, communication and design domains."

PART-TIME PROGRAM FITS INTO BUSY LIVES

The IMC master's degree program at Stonehill is offered part time, with the opportunity to graduate in as few as two years. Fall and spring courses meet just one night a week. This summer, Stonehill will offer two five-week mini-terms for courses in Marketing Management and The Role of Graphic Design.

"It meets my criteria — attractive courses, near my home and ultimately a degree from Stonehill, which has a stellar academic reputation," said James Lynch, director of marketing at Massasoit Community College. "In addition, the welcome and support from the program's staff has been so smooth and helpful, one of the best experiences I have ever had."

Whether graduates of the program want to start their own business, run a marketing department or simply enhance their skillset, the flexibility of the program is designed to help them achieve their career goals.

"It's an important step in increasing my knowledge of the craft and advancing my career," said Geoff Smith, associate dean for admission information systems at Stonehill College. "I know that an advanced degree from Stonehill will open new doors for me."

ABOUT STONEHILL COLLEGE

Stonehill College is conveniently located in Easton, Massachusetts, just 22 miles from Boston and 35 miles from Providence. Publications involved in assessing U.S. colleges and universities, including U.S. News & World Report, Bloomberg and Forbes, repeatedly single out Stonehill as being among the best when it comes to value, outcomes and a commitment to making the world a better place.

patrick.king@metro.us

It's hard enough just to get a college degree.

Unfortunately, that's only the first step toward success. So how can a struggling student make the most of a hard-won education?

Hang out at career services. Early and often.

These connectors link students with mentors who can set up internships, on-campus jobs and even one-on-one meetings with recruiters. Wouldn't it be nice if all that money (or scholarship) enabled you to go into a job right after graduation?

Yeah, we think so, too. So hurry up and meet the people at your career-development center.

According to Bethany Godsoe, associate vice to a career-development center is when they're looking for a job," Godsoe says. "To make good use of career services, you need to have a good sense of what you want cifically what they want to be doing after college. They can take advantage of different assessments that will help them get a better sense of their direction, take advantage of coaching appointments, and have opportunities to meet employers in a casual setting with very low stakes. If they do all of this in advance, they'll be in much better positions to become successful."

So rather than approaching a career-services department the way you'd approach eating at a restaurant (menu, order, go), consider career-development staff more like matchmakers. You might not know what you want until options are presented to you.

Godsoe says she believes the most common mistake students make is thinking they aren't ready to take advantage of career services.

"Sometimes students think they have to do a lot of work on their own before they get to the career-services center, and that may feel daunting to them," she says. "Our philosophy is precisely the opposite. What we see is that students are better off later on if they develop mentoring relationships while they're in college, and if they take advantage of opportunities to apply what they're learning in the classroom through internships or projects that last past the semester. Those are precisely what a career development office can help them navigate."

The takeaway? Start setting up your career path before you've settled on a major. There are people waiting to help you do it.

"Sometimes students think they have to do a lot of work on their own before they get to the career services center, and that may feel daunting to them."

How to get enough vitamin D when the sun's not shining

A good breakfast can get you halfway there. ISTOCK

And let's be honest ... if this is "spring" you'll need all the help you can get.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

With weather like this, it's tempting to forgo all health efforts (physical or mental) and give in to sloth-like inactivity — binge watching, eating too much, drinking too much, skipping workouts — and leaning into a sedentary, indoor existence. "I'll feel better when the sun comes out," we tell ourselves, and then another nor'easter hits.

Yet, keeping active and eating healthy is how to effectively fight off winter gloom. Which brings us to vitamin D: You can't entirely blame the absence of Mr. Yellowface for your lack of the "sunshine vitamin."

This magic hormone has several health benefits. It helps your bones absorb calcium, preventing dental problems and conditions like osteoporosis; it's vital for muscle health and promotes new cell growth; it regulates your immune system and can ward off depressive symptoms; it decreases the risk of diabetes, heart disease, and certain cancers, such as breast, pancreatic and prostate. In short, it's vital to the health of multiple bodily systems and our general well-being.

Although we get most of our vitamin D from the sun, it doesn't take much time basking in the light to get what we need — 10 to 15 minutes can be sufficient. The recommended daily intake is 400 international units (IU) for kids, 600 IU for adults and 800 IU daily for seniors. But you can also get your daily requirement from your diet.

Dairy products (milk, egg yolks and cheese), fatty fish (tuna, mackerel, salmon, cod liver oil), and vitamin D-fortified orange juice and fortified cereals are all great sources. According to the National Institutes of Health, a 3-ounce sockeye salmon is 450 IU, while an 8-ounce glass of fortified milk, and fortified orange juice, each contain an easy 100 IU. An egg yolk gets you close to 50 IU, while a cup of fortified cereal (like multi-grain Cheerios) or oatmeal is roughly 40 IU.

If you need a little help, you can find an over-the-counter supplement, but be careful about dosage, as some contain as much as 2,000 IU of vitamin D per pill. Consult with your doctor before you supplement to make sure you don't exceed the safe daily intake of roughly 4,000 IU for adults and 3,000 IU for kids.

Coming-of-age TV shows you need to stream right now

"On My Block" just premiered on Netflix, bringing with it all the teen angst and pleasant nostalgia it can muster. The series — proof that Netflix is doubling down on a variety of high school narratives — follows four street-savvy friends making their way through their freshman year against the background of South Central Los Angeles. It's also pretty funny!

With that in mind, we're looking at other coming-of-age tv shows that make us feel all warm and fuzzy inside. Perfect if you're looking for something to binge/revisit. RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

"Degrassi"

Your standard lessons learned series, brimming with school shootings, all matter of bullying and, perhaps most importantly, a young Drake? Gets us teary just thinking about it.

"Freaks and Geeks"

The go-to when it comes to painfully accurate coming-of-age high school fare, "Freaks and Geeks" perfectly allows you to relieve the horrid moments of your childhood — and laugh at them at the same time.

"Daria"

The satirical show about a misanthropic teen inspired a generation of cynical women, and we're here for it. Watching Daria — with best friend Jane — take no ish was particularly riveting.

Dental Cavities Research Study Seeking Volunteers - Tufts University School of Dental Medicine

We are seeking volunteers for a study comparing two different materials that are used to fill cavities.

To qualify, you must:

- Be at least 18 years of age
- Have two back teeth with cavities in need of fillings
- Must not have had treatment on those teeth in the past 12 months

If you qualify for the study, one of your teeth will be randomly selected to receive a filling with one material, and your other tooth will be randomly selected to receive a filling with a second material. Both materials are approved by the FDA to be used to fill cavities.

There are a total of 5 visits over a 2-year period. Qualifying participants will receive the two fillings free of charge, and a total of $245 in gift cards if you complete all study visits.

All study visits take place at Tufts University School of Dental Medicine.

If you think you may qualify, please contact Dental Research Administration at 617-636-3865 for more information.

"Gossip Girl"

Somehow, this series about a group of horny, plotting and privileged high schoolers blended camp with plots about consent, first loves and the compulsion to be popular. XOXO.

"Gilmore Girls"

Sure, Stars Hollow is almost too quirky to even exist fictionally, but "Gilmore Girls" worth it for the banter, how straight-up sweet it is and its many tender moments. I love you, you idiot!

"My So-Called Life"

The show that never got a chance gave a raw look at adolescence and dealt with some dark stuff: child abuse, teenage alcoholism, homophobia and more. Also, Jordan Catalano still kind of makes us swoon, over 20 years later.

"Glee"

"Glee" took a bunch of well-defined, superfamiliar high school stereotypes and forced them together to sing Journey songs. Whether an episode focused on the popular jock or the overeager theater nerd, the series managed to humanize them all.

"The OC"

"The OC" is the perfect show. Starring a bunch of young adult actors posing as underage teens, it brings together a perfect storm of ridiculous plot lines, delicious drama, witty wordplay and the best trends of the early aughts. Welcome to the O.C., bitch!

The best spring things to do in Boston

Catch a Red Sox game, take a stroll in the Public Garden and more.

matthew.juul@metro.us

It may not feel like spring just yet thanks to all those pesky nor'easters, but the season officially kicks off today. Although it's going to take a while for all that snow to melt, we promise that April showers and May flowers are right around the corner. From walks in the park to trips down the Charles, here are some of the best things to do in Boston this spring.

Art in Bloom

Nothing says spring quite like this popular tradition at the Museum of Fine Arts. The annual festivities, which return April 28-30, features dozens of colorful, art-inspired arrangements throughout the museum, as well as guided tours and flower-arranging demos. Guests will also be able to enjoy a new Art in

Bloom Market, a pop-up flower truck, plus other fun activities. April 28-30, Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., mfa.org

Lilac Sunday

Spend Mother's Day at this floral celebration at the Arnold Arboretum. Located around Bussey Hill Road, the botanical garden's collection of lilacs is one of the best in North America. Guests will be able to enjoy tours and family activities when the annual event returns in May. May 13, 10 a.m.-3 p.m., Arnold Arboretum, 25 Arborway, arboretum.harvard.edu

Marathon Monday

Besides St. Patrick's Day, there's no bigger party in the city than the annual Marathon Monday festivities. The Boston Marathon races back into town April 16, with the first heat set to kick off in Hopkinton at 8:50 a.m. If you're running in this year's marathon, make sure to swing by Fenway Park that night for the official post-race party. April 16, various locations, baa.org

Public Garden

Boston's Public Garden is one of the most beautiful places in the city to visit during spring. Take a ride in the Swan Boats starting April 14, and don't forget to celebrate Mother's Day with the adorable Duckling Day on May 13. 4 Charles St.

Red Sox

You know it's finally spring when baseball season arrives, so you'll want to plan a trip to Fenway Park to check out this year's crew. The Red Sox make their return to Boston for Opening Day against the Tampa Bay Rays on April 5. 4 Yawkey Way, mlb.com/

redsox

Run the Charles

Paddling season kicks off April 29 when Run the Charles returns for its 36th year. The event features 1,500 racers and thousands of spectators each year, so stop by along the route between Dedham to Brighton to enjoy all the fun. April 29, various locations, crwa.org

JUST THE TIP

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

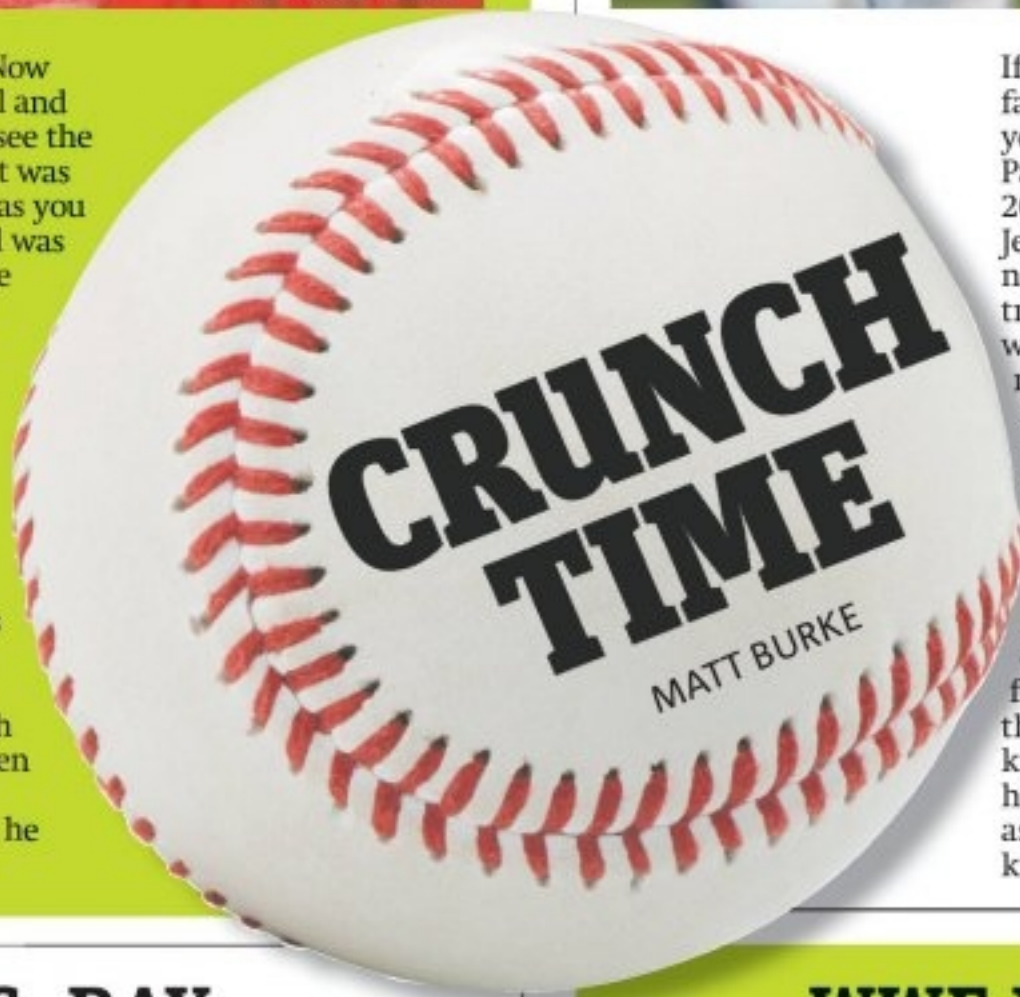

Former Red Sox manager John Farrell was supposed to be the pitching guru, but new Sox skipper Alex Cora might have him beat in the pitch tipping category.

Cora says that Eduardo Rodriguez's days of giving away his pitches are over.

"It got to a point a few years ago where just watching from the couch, I saw the tipping," Cora told WEEL.com. "I know that [the tipping] was a big deal here. We're working on that. I guarantee that. ... The other stuff the whole league knows probably won't be there anymore. Now you'll see the ball and hit it. You won't see the glove and hit it. It was obvious. As long as you knew the fastball was coming, you were fine. It won't be there this year."

Cora is coming from the champion Astros, who allegedly picked up on Yu Darvish's pitch tipping during last year's World Series. Cora was asked about the Darvish pitch-tipping when he was hired by the Red Sox, and he simply smirked.

FRESH FACES IN FOXBORO

If this was your 2014 fantasy football draft, you'd be loving the Patriots right now. The 2018 Pats now have Jeremy Hill as a running back, and they traded for Oakland wide receiver Cordarrelle Patterson on Sunday. Patterson figures to be mainly a kick returner for the Pats as they need one with Dion Lewis and Danny Amendola elsewhere. Patterson figures to be one of the more explosive kick returners the Pats have had in some time as he has five career kick returns for TDs in his five-year NFL career. He's returned just one punt in the NFL, but showed explosiveness in the punt return game while in college at Tennessee.

It's tough to tell if Patterson will see much time as an actual receiver as he has just 163 catches and just seven catching touchdowns in his career. That said, there's a big difference between catching balls from Tom Brady and catching balls from the likes of Christian Ponder, Teddy Bridgewater, Matt Cassel, Sam Bradford and Derek Carr.

RONDO VS. RAY

The Rajon Rondo-Ray Allen beef is 100 percent real as Rondo went after Allen this past weekend following excerpts of Allen's new book being released. In the excerpts, Allen goes into several stories that paint Rondo in a bad light — particularly one about Rondo allegedly saying he "carried the Celtics" to the 2008 championship.

"[Allen] just wants attention," Rondo told The Boston Globe. "I actually need some sales from [the book]. The only [publicity] it's been getting is from my name. I need some percentage or something ... Obviously that man is hurting. I don't know if it's financially, I don't know if it's mentally. He wants to stay relevant. I am who I am. I don't try to be something I'm not. I can't say the same for him. He's looking for attention. I'm a better human being than that. I take accountability for my actions."

WWE HALL OF LAME

Ya know how people make fun of the Celtics for having retired like every average-to-great player's number? Well, the WWE takes the cake in the over-the-top post-career accolades department. Here is the WWE's Hall of Fame class for 2018: Goldberg, Mark Henry, The Dudley Boyz, Ivory, Jeff Jarrett, Hillbilly Jim and Kid Rock. I can see Goldberg ... but Hillbilly Jim? Kid Rock? Because WWE paid him $50K once to sing one song at a WrestleMania?

Here are some dudes already in the Hall of Fame — Koko B. Ware, Donald Trump (seriously), Mr. T, Drew Carey, Pete Rose, The Godfather, and The Bushwhackers.

Expect the WWE Hall of Fame class of 2023 to include The Repo Man, Duke "The Dumpster" Droese, Glacier, The Boogeyman, Eugene and Bastion Booger. Expect the class of 2024 to include no one, as they will have run out of names.

Celtics hoping for Kyrie return against Thunder

The C's will welcome red-hot OKC to the Garden tonight.

MATT BURKE
matt.burke@metro.us

The injury-riddled Celtics could get a boost Tuesday (8 p.m., TNT) against Oklahoma City at the Garden as Kyrie Irving (knee) is expected to return to the lineup.

"I think he feels better and better," Celtics head coach Brad Stevens told MassLive.com. "He just doesn't quite feel 100 percent. So until that point, then he'll be out. There was a chance that he would play [Sunday in the loss to the Pelicans]. He just didn't quite feel that.

Kyrie Irving lofts a floater in the lane against Oklahoma City earlier this season. GETTY IMAGES

And again, we're going to make sure he feels that way."

Jaylen Brown (concussion) could also return to the Celtics lineup Tuesday but it's a 50-50 deal at this point.

Irving and Brown are the Celtics' two leading scorers this season and the C's could certainly use both of them Tuesday night against a Thunder team that is finally finding its way this season. Oklahoma City has rattled off six straight wins as Russell Westbrook, Paul George and Carmelo Anthony are now excelling in their respective roles.

The Thunder put up a whopping 132 points in a win over the East-leading Raptors Sunday in Toronto as Westbrook poured in 37 points. Oklahoma City (43-29) has now climbed into the No. 4 seed in the Western Conference while the Celtics (47-23) look almost certain to be the No. 2 seed in the East come playoff time.

The Celtics have struggled to score in their last two outings

The duo of Kyrie Irving and Jaylen Brown, the Celtics' top two leading scorers, combine for an average of 38.5 points per game. The Celtics have been without the two for over a week.

as they put up just 92 points in a nine-point win over Orlando last Friday, and they totaled just 89 points in a 19-point loss in New Orleans on Sunday.

Aries Emotional energy will cause frustration and anger if you don't have an outlet. Choose something physical you enjoy doing to let off steam rather than getting into an argument.

Taurus Keep your thoughts to yourself and wait to see what others do and say before you step in and offer suggestions. Don't divulge personal secrets or travel too far from home.

Gemini Love may be enticing, but don't jump into something without giving it enough thought. Once you make a promise, you'll have to keep it if you want to maintain peace.

Cancer You'll face opposition when it comes to change. If someone puts up a fuss, consider the pros and cons that come with the change you or someone close to you wants to make.

Leo Focus on getting along, not on messing things up. Whether you are dealing with a friend, children, a parent or a loved one, listen and offer an incentive to get your way.

Virgo Stress will mount if you make changes to your home or haggle over the price of a costly venture or item. Proceed with caution.

Libra A positive attitude will help you ward off someone's grumpy attitude. Don't take no for an answer, and make plans that will brighten someone's day.

Scorpio Being pushy may bring about change, but it may also harm your relationship with someone special. Think about your actions before you say or do something you'll regret.

Sagittarius Your insight will help when dealing with people you are close to. Make suggestions and build a foundation for a healthy and progressive lifestyle.

Capricorn Keep your emotions in check and the changes you make minimal. Don't follow someone else when you should be doing your own thing. Take care of yourself first.

Aquarius Think big, but keep what you actually do simple and within budget. Focus on what's worth the effort and avoid what isn't. A romantic evening is encouraged.

Pisces Look forward with optimism. Know what you are qualified to do and do whatever it takes to make your dreams come true. It's time to put your needs first. EUGENIA LAST
